The endogenous digitalis is formed when circulating atrial natriuretic peptide (ANP) is bound to the membrane receptors of the vascular endothelium, resulting in a diminished entry of sodium into the extracellular compartment and a shift of the electrocardiographic QT interval toward the left. Since this peptide is the natriuretic hormone, plasma concentrations are raised in disease states that promote cardiac congestion, especially when diuretics are employed. In view of the recent findings on the pharmacokinetics of ANP, this peptide can be considered as a sort of endogenous marker for congestion. The reported plasma concentrations of ANP vary from 3 to 300 pg/ml and may be elevated by volume depletion, atrial fibrillation, and hypercortisolism. Because the effects of ANP are reduced or abolished after pretreatment with loop diuretics, they should not be used as long-term monotherapy for congestive heart failure. The clinical use of ANP might be limited to the improvement of diuresis in cases of severe heart failure, especially when administration of loop diuretics has failed to decrease urinary output.ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. -- When the headlines blared late Thursday that the Seminoles were "going forward with a travel boycott" against Florida State, several games were on the schedule for some fans. University president Eric Barron was asked at his Thursday evening news conference about the travel conditions, what the players would think about it and what would happen if it was necessary to cancel a game against a football power. He said they've tried to be as respectful as possible, through the Seminole coaches and athletic directors, but they've also used media to tell their side. Asked about the travel demands, Barron said: "We want our football players to be treated with respect. We want them to be treated with dignity. We don't want our players to be treated with anything other than respect, and that's not what the
