So naturally, the Yankees' second baseman doesn't feel guilty playing for their Triple-A affiliate, the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre RailRiders. Because the RailRiders are nothing like the Yankees, but they are right on his heels. The RailRiders open a three-game series against the Trenton Thunder on Wednesday night and Gardner looks forward to playing alongside his former teammate and Yankees center fielder Aaron Hicks. "I like the guys, they have a nice clubhouse atmosphere," Gardner said Monday at SWB's complex. "Aaron and myself had a good relationship [in the majors]. I think he's a real good guy and I'm excited to play with him. "I'm excited about the guys here, they get us going. I think our expectations are high, we're working really hard to get there. I know they want to get to the [Yankees] as well and have a championship run, we want to be right behind them." Gardner, who led all major-league second basemen in hits last season with 203, has been seeing a lot of the center-fielders at SWB lately. The RailRiders have played in the minor leagues 2edc1e01e8
